RESEARCH FOCUS

Dr. Gabram's current research focuses on disparities of care for breast cancer patients. She serves as the medical director for the AVON outreach and navigation program as well as the Co-PI on the AVON Foundation grant responsible for clinical access to quality care for breast cancer patients in the Grady Health System. She has an interest in patients at risk for breast cancer and as a PI is interested in randomizing clinic sites to receiving in-depth information on the breast cancer risk status of patients versus standard of care and then measuring the effects on the number of appropriate referrals for genetic evaluation, use of breast MRI screening, and chemoprevention. This research builds on pilot data that she collected at Loyola from a study funded by the Illinois Department of Public Health, Penny Severns Research Fund. From a predictive health perspective, she has formed a collaboration with Dr. Charlene Bayer at the Georgia Technology Research Institute and is involved as a Co-PI on a study that is examining breath biomarkers in exhaled specimens as a potential tool for breast cancer disease detection and monitoring.
